The Three Kingdoms Period (57 BC - 668 AD)

This era saw the rise of three powerful kingdoms: Goguryeo, Baekje, and Silla. Each kingdom contributed to the cultural and political foundations of Korea:

- Goguryeo: Known for its military prowess and expansionist policies.

- Baekje: Renowned for its advancements in art and culture, especially in Buddhism.
- Silla: Famous for its unification of the three kingdoms and the establishment of the first unified Korean state.

The Goryeo Dynasty (918 - 1392)

- Buddhism: Flourished during this period, influencing art and architecture.
- Celadon Pottery: The exquisite celadon ceramics became a hallmark of Goryeo craftsmanship.
- Civil Service Exams: The establishment of a merit-based bureaucratic system began here, laying the groundwork for future governance.

- Resistance Movements: Various movements emerged, such as the March 1st Movement in 1919, highlighting the Korean desire for independence.

The Division of Korea

The end of Japanese rule in 1945 marked the beginning of a new chapter: the division of Korea into North and South. Eugene Park discusses the complexities surrounding this division:

Post-World War II Dynamics

Following Japan's defeat, Korea was divided along the 38th parallel, leading to:

- U.S. and Soviet Occupation: The northern part was influenced by Soviet communism, while the southern part aligned with American capitalism.
- Ideological Conflicts: Rising tensions between the two ideologies set the stage for conflict.

The Korean War (1950-1953)

The Korean War had profound effects on both Koreas, resulting in:

- Humanitarian Crisis: Millions were displaced, and countless lives were lost in the conflict.
- Military Division: The establishment of the Korean Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) solidified the division and created a heavily militarized border.

Cultural Resilience and Modern Korea

Despite the traumas of war and division, Korea has demonstrated remarkable resilience. Eugene Park emphasizes the revival of Korean culture and identity in the modern era:
