The Origin of the Legend of the Chinese Zodiac

The legend of the Chinese zodiac originates from ancient Chinese mythology and folklore, with multiple versions of the story passed down through generations. The most popular version involves the Jade Emperor, the supreme deity in traditional Chinese cosmology, who decided to select twelve animals to represent the years in a cycle. To determine the order of these animals, he held a great race, inviting all creatures to participate. The animals' performance in this race established the sequence of the zodiac signs, which has remained unchanged for thousands of years. This origin story highlights themes of cleverness, perseverance, and competition, which are reflected in the characteristics attributed to each animal sign.

The Race of the Animals

According to the legend, the Jade Emperor announced a race across a river as the method to choose the twelve zodiac animals. The animals had to cross the river, and the first twelve to arrive would be selected as the zodiac signs. The order in which they finished determined their place in the zodiac calendar. The rat, known for its cunning, cleverly hitched a ride on the back of the ox, jumping off just before the finish line to claim the first position. The ox came second, followed by the tiger, rabbit, dragon, snake, horse, goat, monkey, rooster, dog, and pig. Each animal's behavior during the race is said to symbolize its traits and has influenced how each zodiac sign is perceived in Chinese astrology.
