History and Background of Lippincott Williams & Wilkins

Lippincott Williams & Wilkins traces its roots back to several historic publishing houses, including J.B. Lippincott & Co., founded in 1836, which became known for its influential medical and nursing publications. Over the years, mergers and acquisitions shaped the company into the modern entity known today. The 1998 merger of Williams & Wilkins and J.B. Lippincott Company created Lippincott Williams & Wilkins, uniting two prominent names in healthcare publishing. This union allowed the company to expand its portfolio significantly, covering a wide array of medical disciplines and educational resources.

Throughout its history, LWW has maintained a strong commitment to producing authoritative and reliable medical literature. This dedication has made it a preferred publisher for healthcare professionals, educators, and students worldwide. The company's catalog includes textbooks, reference works, academic journals, and digital platforms, all aimed at advancing medical knowledge and practice.

Current Publishing Location and Headquarters

The primary publishing location and corporate headquarters of Lippincott Williams & Wilkins is situated in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA.
