Understanding Mimbres Culture

The Mimbres people were part of the larger Mogollon culture, which was characterized by its unique pottery styles, agricultural practices, and village life. They were primarily farmers, cultivating crops such as maize, beans, and squash. Their society was matrilineal, with lineage traced through the mother, and they lived in pithouses, which were semi-subterranean dwellings.

Artistry of Mimbres Pottery

Mimbres pottery is distinguished by its black-on-white designs, which often feature geometric patterns, animals, and human figures.
