Training Requirements

Training is crucial for all therapy dogs, and Mini Goldendoodles are no exception. Proper training ensures that they can behave appropriately in various situations and provide the support that individuals need.

1. Basic Obedience Training

Before specializing in therapy work, a Mini Goldendoodle should undergo basic obedience training. This includes commands such as:

3. Therapy Dog Certification

To work as a therapy dog, a Mini Goldendoodle must undergo specific training and certification. Organizations such as Pet Partners or Therapy Dogs International offer programs that assess the dog's temperament, behavior, and training. The certification process typically includes:

Therapy dogs can act as social facilitators, encouraging interaction among individuals who may otherwise feel isolated. This is particularly beneficial in educational settings, where students may find it easier to engage with their peers when a friendly dog is present.
