General interview questions are designed to assess a candidate's background, motivation, and overall suitability for the role. These questions often start the interview and set the tone for subsequent discussion. Employers use them to gauge communication skills, professionalism, and cultural fit.

Common Examples of General Questions

Most commonly asked job interview questions in this category include:

- Can you tell me about yourself?
- Why are you interested in this position?
- What do you know about our company?
- What are your greatest strengths and weaknesses?
- Where do you see yourself in five years?

Each question provides an opportunity for candidates to showcase their knowledge, enthusiasm, and alignment with the company's values and goals. Preparing concise, honest, and relevant answers is essential to make a strong first impression.

Behavioral Interview Questions

Behavioral interview questions focus on past experiences to predict future performance. Interviewers ask these to understand how candidates handle real-world situations, work with others, and solve problems.

Key Behavioral Questions

Examples of behavioral questions frequently asked include:

- Describe a time you faced a challenging situation at work. How did you handle it?
- Give an example of a goal you achieved and the steps you took to reach it.
- Tell me about a time you worked effectively under pressure.
- Have you ever had a conflict with a coworker? How was it resolved?
- Describe a situation where you demonstrated leadership.

Responding to these questions typically involves using the STAR method (Situation, Task, Action, Result) to provide structured, specific answers that highlight problem-solving skills and interpersonal abilities.

Situational Interview Questions

Situational interview questions present hypothetical scenarios to evaluate a candidate's problem-solving, decision-making, and critical thinking skills. These questions assess how a person might react in job-related situations.

Examples of Situational Questions

Some commonly asked situational questions are:

- What would you do if you disagreed with a supervisor's decision?

Providing thoughtful, logical responses that demonstrate accountability and proactive problem-solving is vital when answering situational questions.
