Origins of the National Urban League

The National Urban League was born during a time of significant social and economic upheaval in the United States. The early 1900s saw a massive migration of African Americans from rural Southern states to urban centers in the North, driven by the desire for better job opportunities and escape from the oppressive Jim Crow laws.

Founding Principles

The founders of the National Urban League, including Ruth Standish Baldwin and George Edmund Haynes, aimed to address the challenges faced by these new urban residents. They sought to promote:

3. Community development: Fostering the growth of healthy and sustainable communities.
