Overview of Phyrexia: All Will Be One Sealed Format

The Phyrexia: All Will Be One sealed format offers a unique experience that differs from traditional limited formats. Players open six booster packs from the set and build a minimum 40-card deck using only the cards they receive, supplemented by basic lands. This format emphasizes adaptability and skillful card evaluation due to the varied and powerful cards in the set. Understanding the structure of the sealed format is crucial to developing the right approach to deck construction and gameplay.

Structure of Sealed Events

Sealed events typically involve players constructing decks from newly opened packs in a tournament setting. In Phyrexia: All Will Be One, players receive six booster packs, each containing 15 cards. The format restricts deck construction to cards found in those packs and basic lands. Tournament rounds often follow a best-of-three match format, rewarding strategic deck building and in-game decisions.

Differences from Draft

Unlike draft, where players select cards from rotating booster packs passed among participants, sealed requires players to work solely with the contents of their packs. This means players must have a keen understanding of card power levels and synergy potential without the benefit of choosing cards from a shared pool. Phyrexia: All Will Be One sealed encourages a more reactive and flexible deck-building process.

Key Mechanics and Keywords

Phyrexia: All Will Be One introduces several unique mechanics and keywords that influence both deck construction and gameplay strategies. Familiarity with these mechanics is essential to identifying powerful card combinations and maximizing deck efficiency.

Proliferate and Infect

Proliferate allows players to increase the number of counters on permanents and players, while Infect deals damage in the form of poison counters. These mechanics can create alternative victory conditions and apply pressure on opponents in non-traditional ways.

Completed and Corrupted

Completed is a mechanic representing the transformation of creatures into Phyrexian entities, often granting additional abilities or resilience. Corrupted cards typically have interactions that benefit from or trigger these transformations, adding depth to deck synergy.

Sacrifice and Removal Synergies

The set heavily features sacrifice outlets and removal spells that can synergize with various strategies. Utilizing these effects effectively can control the board state and enable powerful combos.

Card Evaluation and Pick Priorities

Effective card evaluation is the cornerstone of success in Phyrexia: All Will Be One sealed guide strategies. Prioritizing cards based on power level, versatility, and synergy can make a significant difference in deck performance.

Assessing Individual Card Strength

Cards with high impact on the board, strong removal, or efficient creatures are generally prioritized. The presence of keywords such as Infect or Proliferate increases a card's value in certain archetypes. Additionally, rares and mythic rares with game-changing effects should be evaluated carefully for inclusion.

Synergy and Color Considerations

Choosing cards that align well within a color or across colors is essential. Players should focus on building cohesive decks that maximize synergy rather than splashing multiple colors without support. Mana fixing and curve considerations are also critical in pick priority decisions.

Removal and Interaction

Removal spells are vital in controlling the opponent's threats. Prioritizing efficient removal and interaction cards ensures better control of the board, which is often the key to victory in sealed formats.

Deck Building Strategies

Constructing a solid deck in Phyrexia: All Will Be One sealed requires balancing aggressive and defensive elements while maintaining a strong mana base. Strategic deck building can leverage the set's unique mechanics for maximum effectiveness.

Determining the Primary Colors

Players should analyze their pool to identify the strongest colors and avoid spreading too thin. Prioritizing two colors typically yields the best results, with the option to splash a third color if mana fixing permits.

Mana Curve Optimization

A well-balanced mana curve ensures consistent play across all phases of the game. Including a mix of early creatures and late-game threats enables smooth gameplay and resilience against different opponent strategies.

Including Key Synergies

Incorporating cards that synergize well with the set's mechanics, such as Infect or sacrifice outlets, can create powerful combinations. Decks should emphasize these synergies to maximize the potential of available cards.

Synergies and Archetypes

Phyrexia: All Will Be One sealed brings several archetypes centered around the set's mechanics.

Understanding these archetypes helps players build focused decks that exploit specific strategies.

Infect Aggro

This archetype focuses on dealing poison counters quickly through creatures with Infect and supporting spells. It often plays an aggressive role, pressuring opponents early in the game.

Proliferate Control

Control decks utilizing Proliferate aim to accumulate counters on creatures or players, leveraging removal and card advantage to dominate the late game. This archetype can be resilient and tactical.

Sacrifice and Token Strategies

Decks that incorporate sacrifice outlets and token generation can create value by repeatedly triggering effects and maintaining board presence. These archetypes excel in attrition and incremental advantage.

Midrange Combos

Midrange archetypes blend efficient creatures with removal and synergy cards, adapting well to various matchups. This balanced approach is often favored in sealed due to its flexibility.

Sideboarding Tips and Matchup Considerations

Proper sideboarding is critical in best-of-three matches typical of sealed events. Adjusting the deck between games can exploit opponent weaknesses and shore up vulnerabilities.

Identifying Key Matchups

Recognizing the opponent's deck archetype allows for targeted sideboarding. Players should consider which cards perform better against aggro, control, or combo decks within the Phyrexia: All Will Be One environment.

Effective Sideboard Cards

Cards that provide additional removal, disruption, or resilience are valuable sideboard inclusions. Including answers to common threats and strategies encountered in sealed play can improve match outcomes.

Adapting Strategy Post-Sideboard

Players should adjust their game plan and resource management based on sideboarded cards. Flexibility and anticipation are key to leveraging sideboarding advantages in subsequent games.

- Focus on building a cohesive deck around the strongest colors.
- Prioritize cards with powerful mechanics like Infect and Proliferate.
- Maintain a balanced mana curve for consistent gameplay.
- Leverage synergies between sacrifice outlets and token generators.
- Use sideboarding strategically to counter specific opponent strategies.
