Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin were the primary negotiators. The stakes were high, as both leaders faced internal pressures from their respective governments and populations.

Negotiation Process

- Preparation: The U.S. administration spent months preparing the groundwork, understanding the key issues, and establishing a conducive environment for dialogue.
- Facilitating Dialogue: Carter employed a mix of diplomacy and pressure, facilitating discussions in a secluded environment to minimize distractions.
- Concessions: Both leaders made significant concessions. Egypt formally recognized Israel, while Israel agreed to withdraw from the Sinai Peninsula.
